Introduction. The current version of Article 9 (“Current Article 9”) of the Uniform Commercial Code (“UCC”), as promulgated in 1998 by the Uniform Law Commissioners (“ULC”) and The American Law Institute (“ALI”), has been enacted in all fifty states, the District of Columbia, and the U.S. Virgin Islands, and generally took effect on July 1, 2001. From 2008 to 2010, a committee (the “Review Committee”) convened by the ULC and the ALI considered certain issues, ultimately recommending amendments to the official text of, and official comments to, Current Article 9 (the “2010 Amendments”). While most are unremarkable and simply clarify existing text, some are noteworthy. This article provides a summary and brief discussion of the 2010 Amendments.¹ To the extent feasible, related provisions are discussed together regardless of their juxtaposition in the code. Unless otherwise noted, all citations in this article are to Current Article 9.

Summary. The 2010 Amendments were approved by the National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws at its 2010 annual meeting, and are now (or will shortly be) available for consideration and adoption. They include provisions that clarify, rather than change, what was intended by Current Article 9, as well as substantive changes reflecting emerged and emerging thought. Perhaps the most significant change is the offering of two alternative approaches to the vagaries of determining individual debtors’ names. Alternative A, the so-called “only if” approach, would require that such names be rendered as they appear on a driver’s license or other specified document. Alternative B, the so-called “safe harbor” approach, would merely create a safe harbor for financing statements naming debtors thus. Other debtor name changes are relevant where collateral is held by the personal representative of a decedent, and where collateral is held in a trust. The classification of certain entities as “registered organizations” is clarified, as is the record to be consulted to determine a registered organization’s name. The current “four month rule” that continues perfection following a change in a debtor’s location would be changed to provide not merely that a secured party’s perfected security interest continues for four months following a change in its debtor’s location (or, similarly, for four months following a new debtor becoming bound under an existing security agreement), but that such secured party is generally perfected in collateral acquired by its debtor within four months thereafter. The much-misunderstood “correction statement,” which has no legal effect and can be filed only by a debtor, would be renamed an “information statement,” would continue to have no legal effect, but could be filed by either a debtor or a secured party. The proposed changes would eliminate the requirement that financing statements indicate a debtor’s type of organization, jurisdiction of organization, and organizational identification number, based on the judgment that the burden of providing such information outweighs the resulting benefits. These and the other revisions are discussed in more detail below.

Proposed Changes to Part 1: General Provisions.

Section 9-102(a)(7) – “authenticate”: The 2010 Amendments begin with revisions to certain definitions. Section 9-102(a)(7) is revised such that the definition of “authenticate” more closely resembles the definitions of “sign” in revised UCC Articles 1 and 7. Recall that Current Article 9, intending to be medium-neutral, largely did away with anachronistic terms that suggested any requirement for paper documents and manual signatures affixed by humans wielding pens.

This amendment is intended to bring to Article 9 the further-refined thinking of the years since the text of Current Article 9 was finalized in 1998.

Section 9-102(a)(10) – “certificate of title”: Section 9-102(a)(10)’s definition of “certificate of title” is revised to comport with the emerging practice in many jurisdictions of maintaining non-paper electronic records evidencing both ownership and security interests. Conforming changes appear in Section 9-311 (Perfection of Security Interests in Property Subject to Certain Statutes, Regulations, and Treaties). The 2010 Amendments include a new sentence in Official Comment 5b to Section 9-102, noting that when electronic chattel paper is converted to tangible form (“papered-out,” in industry parlance), tangible chattel paper results. In a similar vein, Official Comment 3 to Section 9-330 is modified to more clearly state that a secured party may achieve priority with respect to “hybrid” chattel paper (that is, chattel paper that is partly tangible and partly electronic chattel paper) under Section 9-330(a) or (b), and to clarify how a secured party can retain its priority when tangible chattel paper is converted to electronic chattel paper and vice versa.

Official Comment 5d to Section 9-102 – Assignment of Lessor Rights as Chattel Paper: Rejecting the holding in In re Commercial Money Center, Inc., 350 B.R. 465 (B.A.P. 9th Cir. 2006), the 2010 Amendments provide in their changes to Official Comment 5d to Section 9-102 that if a lessor’s rights under a lease constitute chattel paper, an assignment of the lessor’s right to payment under the lease, even if the assignment excludes any other rights, would also be an assignment of chattel paper.

Section 9-102(a)(68) – “public organic record”: Section 9-102(a)(68) is new, and brings specificity to the question of just what public record should be consulted to determine a registered organization’s name. The new term “public organic record” generally means the document filed with or issued by the relevant state or the United States to form or organize a registered organization. Revisions to the accompanying Official Comment 11 explicitly indicate that a certificate of good standing is not a public organic record and, thus, not an appropriate referent for determining a registered organization’s name. Similarly, the definition of “Registered organization” in (what will be renumbered as) Section 9-102(a)(71) is amended to clarify that the term includes organizations (i) formed or organized, (ii) by (a) the filing or issuance of a public organic record, or (b) by legislative enactment, even if such organizations are created without the need for a public organic record. These latter two provisions work in concert with revisions to Section 9-503 (discussed below).

Section 9-105 – Control of Electronic Chattel Paper: Section 9-105 is revised to provide a general test, and a safe harbor, for achieving perfection by control of electronic chattel paper. The language derives from the Uniform Electronic Transactions Act, and defers to emerging systems that reliably establish the secured party as the assignee of the chattel paper, contemplating continued innovation in this field generally.

Proposed Changes to Part 3: Perfection and Priority.

Section 9-301 – Law Governing Perfection and Priority: The 2010 Amendments include revision and augmentation of Official Comment 5b to Section 9-301 to clarify certain matters relevant to fixture filings and non-fixture filings against collateral of transmitting utilities. A security interest in most types of collateral, including fixtures, of a transmitting utility can be perfected by a central filing in the jurisdiction where the transmitting utility is located. But a fixture filing is effective to perfect a security interest only in fixtures of a transmitting utility located in the jurisdiction in which such fixture filing is made, with the consequence that multiple such filings may be required.

Section 9-307 – Location of Debtor: It is in Section 9-307 that Current Article 9 provides the rules for determining a debtor’s location, and thus the place in which one must generally file a financing statement naming that debtor for such financing statement to be effective.¹ Its subsection (f) addresses the location of registered organizations organized under federal law. Subparagraph (f)(2) currently provides that where a location is designated in accordance with federal law, such location constitutes the organization’s location for filing purposes. Alas, this succinct and seemingly clear provision has given rise to considerable consternation. In the parlance of many federal laws (e.g., the National Bank Act), what’s designated is actually denominated a “main office” or “home office”, not a location. In its initial enactment of Current Article 9, Delaware added to Section 9-307(f) non-uniform language to the effect that designating a main office or home office constitutes designation of a location. Revised versions of the Official Comments to Current Article 9 offered the same assurance,² but of course lacked the force of law. The 2010 Amendments would remove any doubt that such designations are, in fact, designations of a location for filing purposes.

Section 9-316 – Effect of Change in Governing Law: The 2010 Amendments significantly alter the effect of a change in governing law. Under Current Article 9 Section 316, perfection of security interests that have attached prior to a change in the debtor’s location continues for four months after such change. The 2010 Amendments add a new subsection 316(h) pursuant to which a secured party would also enjoy perfection of security interests that attach within four months after a change in the debtor’s location, provided it has already taken steps pursuant to which it would have been perfected absent the change in location. To illustrate, assume D is located in Florida and SP has properly perfected its security interest in D’s inventory and accounts receivable by filing a financing statement in Florida. Thereafter, D’s location changes to Delaware. Under Current Article 9, SP remains perfected, for four months following the change in location, in any inventory and accounts receivable in which it was perfected before the change. Under the 2010 Amendment, this remains so, but SP is also perfected in any (newly acquired) inventory and (newly arising) accounts receivable to which its security interest first attaches during the four months after the change in location. Such perfection continues until the end of this four-month period.

Similarly, a new subsection 316(i) provides for perfection of security interests that attach within four months after a new debtor becomes bound by an existing security agreement. Returning to our example, let’s suppose that upon its “relocation” to Delaware “old D” is succeeded by “new D” as the debtor bound by the existing security agreement in favor of SP. Let us further suppose that “new D” enters into a financing transaction in which it grants SP2 a security interest in all of its inventory and accounts receivable, and that SP2 promptly perfects its security interest by filing in Delaware a financing statement naming “new D” as debtor. As between SP and SP2, both of whom have perfected security interests in inventory acquired and accounts receivable arising within the four months immediately following the change in location, who has greater priority? Current

² See Official Comment 5 to 9-307, second paragraph.

Article 9 Section 326 generally provides that, with respect to collateral in which the original debtor never held an interest, the security interest perfected by filing against the original debtor is subordinate to the security interest perfected by filing against the new debtor. The 2010 Amendments preserve and extend this result to the circumstances contemplated by new subsection 316(i). Thus, in our example, SP is subordinate to SP2 with respect to collateral in which “old D” never held an interest. A modest revision to Official Comment 2 to Section 9-326 clarifies the interplay between that section and Section 9-508 regarding subordination of certain security interests created by a new debtor.

Section 9-317 – Interests That Take Priority Over or Take Free of Security Interest or Agricultural Lien: In what is viewed as a clarification, the language of Section 9-317 is expanded to explicitly cover buyers of all types of collateral not susceptible to possession. Thus, a licensee of a general intangible, and a buyer (other than a secured party) of any collateral other than tangible chattel paper, tangible documents, good, instruments, or certificated securities takes free of a security interest if he gives value without knowledge of, and before perfection of, such interest.

Section 9-322 – Priorities Among Conflicting Security Interests in and Agricultural Liens on Same Collateral: In another clarification, Official Comment 4 to Section 9-322 has been augmented to include an explicit statement to the effect that a financing statement filed without authorization, but later authorized or ratified, thereupon becomes effective, but nevertheless enjoys priority from its time of filing. Official Comment 8 to the same section has been augmented to complete the explanation of certain priority rules applicable to proceeds: specifically, that where two security interests in the same original collateral are entitled to priority in proceeds under Section 9-322(c)(2), the security interest having priority in the original collateral has priority in the proceeds.

Proposed Changes to Part 4: Rights of Third Parties. Current Article 9 Section 406 is a broad override of contractual restrictions on assignability of receivables. Current Article 9 Section 408 is a narrow such override. The two differ on whether an assignee may enforce the assigned receivable against the account debtor or another obligor. The 2010 Amendments address the allocation of transactions between the broad override of Section 9-406 and the narrow override of Section 9-408, and have relevance where collateral is the right to payment of a loan. As they appear in Current Article 9, Sections 406 and 408 differ on whether an assignee may enforce the assigned receivable against the account debtor or another obligor notwithstanding a contractual restriction on assignability. If the right to payment is evidenced by chattel paper, it is clear the assignee can enforce the right despite any contractual restriction. But if the right to payment is evidenced by an instrument, or is a payment intangible, the assignee can enforce despite contractual restriction if the assignment is made for security, but not if the assignment is a sale. Experience has revealed uncertainty in determining whether foreclosure should be regarded as a “sale” or an assignment “for security.” The 2010 Amendments clarify applicability of 9-406, and explicitly provide that a buyer at a foreclosure sale, as well as the assignee in a strict foreclosure under 9-620, can enforce the right notwithstanding any contractual restriction.

Proposed Changes to Part 5: Filing. Perhaps the greatest and most significant of the 2010 Amendments appear in Section 9-503 (Name of Debtor and Secured Party). These changes are relevant to filings against registered organizations, filings where collateral is being administered by the personal representative of a decedent, filings where collateral is held in a trust that is not a registered organization, and, most significant of all, filings against individual debtors. With different variations in each context, it has proven challenging to determine exactly what a given debtor's name is, and likewise challenging to make other determinations antecedent to filling out financing statements and tendering them for filing. In addition to the changes discussed below, consistent changes appear in Official Comment 2 to Section 9-506 (Effect of Errors or Omissions).

Registered Organizations: It has proven unclear to some just which public record is relevant to determining the name of a registered organization. Many quickly came to the view that good standing certificates were not the appropriate source of such information, but uncertainty remained as to which filed, or issued, formation document should be consulted.³ As revised by the 2010 Amendments, Section 9-503 refers to the "public organic record," the newly defined term appearing at new subsection 9-102(a)(68),⁴ which means a record filed with the relevant state or the United States, and includes a charter issued by such state or the United States. Helpfully, it explicitly notes that a certificate of good standing or an index of domestic entities is irrelevant.⁵ Moving beyond the challenge of determining a registered organization's name, the 2010 Amendments revisit the threshold question of what organizations fit the subcategory of registered organization. "Registered organization" includes an organization created without a public record but that is "formed" only when a public filing has been made. For example, a Delaware statutory trust is "created" by its governing instrument,⁶ but is "formed at the time of the filing of the initial certificate of trust in the office of the Secretary of State. . .".⁷ Similarly, the 2010 Amendments clarify that a Massachusetts business trust is a registered organization.⁸

Decedents and Their Estates, Trusts and Trustees: The 2010 Amendments respond to some extent to difficulties experienced by those endeavoring to determine, in contexts involving decedents and their estates, and trusts and trustees acting with respect to property held in trust, the exact identity of the "debtor", which is to say the person possessed of the requisite rights to meet the statutory definition of "debtor" in Section 9-102(a)(28). In the former context, the 2010 Amendments eliminate the requirement that a filing indicate whether, in fact, the debtor is "a decedent's estate",⁹ and instead simply require indication that the collateral is "being administered by the personal representative of the decedent." In the latter context, the 2010 Amendments eliminate the requirement that a filing indicate whether, in fact, the debtor is "a trust" or, alternatively, is "a trustee acting with respect to property held in trust," and instead simply require indication that "the collateral is held in a trust." In both contexts, special transition rules provide, in effect, that financing statements filed prior to the effective date of the 2010 Amendments and meeting the then-current requirements (that is, the requirements of Current Article 9) in this regard will not cease to be effective by reason of their failure to provide the simpler (yet arguably different) indication required by the 2010 Amendments. The reader is cautioned, however, that although the challenge of determining the precise identity of the “debtor” need no longer be met as a precondition to properly filling out a financing statement, it remains vitally important inasmuch as the financing statement, to be effective, must generally be filed in the jurisdiction in which the debtor is located within the meaning of Section 9-307.¹⁰ Finally, it should be noted that the 2010 Revisions clarify that these special rules applicable to property held in a trust don’t apply where collateral is held by a trust that is itself a registered organization – in such cases, the ordinary rules for filing against registered organization debtors should be followed.

Individual Debtor Names: The issue that presented the greatest challenge to the Review Committee was that of individual debtor names. Under Current Article 9, when the debtor is an individual, a financing statement is sufficient only if it provides the “name of the debtor.” The simplicity of this requirement belies the challenge of its application. American law provides individuals nearly unlimited freedom to change their names, often with little or no formality or documentation. Consider, for example, the name changes that commonly accompany marriage and divorce, and the insidious spread of informality by which many a Thomas is known far and wide as Tom and many an Elizabeth as Liz (or, if personal preference so dictates, Beth), to say nothing of Stefani Joanne Angelina Germanotta (or is her name now “Lady Gaga”? And if so, is that a first name and surname, or something else?). While the Review Committee generally came to share the view that the simplicity of requiring the “name of the debtor,” while appealing, presupposed that one could determine a debtor’s name with greater certainty and ease than experience suggests one actually could, it found no panacea, and instead offers in the 2010 Amendments two alternative approaches. Alternative A – the “only if” approach – requires use of the name that appears on the debtor’s driver’s license or other specified document (e.g., an identification card issued by his or her state of residence) or, if the debtor has no such document, the debtor’s surname and first personal name. Alternative B – the “safe harbor” approach – retains the current “name of the debtor” approach, but also provides a “safe harbor” for using the name designated by statute (viz., the name appearing on the debtor’s driver’s license or state-issued identification card). These alternatives strike different balances in the allocation of risks and protections among filers and searchers. The “only if” approach appears very simple – if only the name on the relevant identification document will suffice, searchers need only conduct searches in such name. But this approach is not without its limitations and shortcomings. If the relevant identification document expires, it is no longer a proper source for determining the debtor’s name. One moves progressively down the waterfall of possible source documents or other indicia of individual names, any of which could provide something different as the debtor’s name. That is to say, a financing statement once perfectly featuring the debtor’s name could cease to be effective upon expiration of a driver’s license. Are secured parties prepared to monitor such developments, or to leave such matters to chance? The “safe harbor” is a viable, though by no means compelling, alternative. Its enactment may make it easier for secured parties to be and remain perfected, but it requires searchers to formulate a variety of queries (and aren’t most people, by turns, both filers and searchers?). The 2010 Amendments leave it to the states to choose between these two alternatives.

Individual Debtor Names – Special Rule for Mortgages: The Review Committee recognized the very real possibility that people may continue to hold real estate in names that differ (at least to some extent) from their names as they appear on their driver’s licenses. New subsection 502(c)(3)(B) recognizes that strict requirement of a debtor’s “driver’s license” name may not make sense in the context of real estate documents, and provides that use of the debtor’s “individual name” or “surname and first personal name” suffice in the case of a mortgage effective as a financing statement. As explained in a legislative note to the 2010 Amendments, Section 9-502 should only be amended in states that adopt Alternative A – the “only if” approach – for naming individual debtors under Section 9-503, and is unnecessary in states that adopt Alternative B – the “safe harbor” approach.

Section 9-507 – Effect of Certain Events on Effectiveness of Financing Statement: Current Article 9 recognizes that debtors sometimes change their names, and that such changes can render existing financing statements seriously misleading and, thus, ineffective, unless appropriate amendments are filed. The Review Committee recognized that Current Article 9 subsection 507(c) focuses on behavior – “If a debtor so changes its name” - and in efforts to coordinate with the proposed revisions to Section 9-503 regarding individuals’ names, shifts the focus to consequences – “the name that a filed financing statement provides for a debtor becomes insufficient . . . under Section 9-503(a).” That is, it recognizes that under the 2010 Amendments a debtor’s name may change not only by reason of action on the part of the debtor, but also by reason of, for example, expiration of a driver’s license.

Section 9-509 – Persons Entitled to File a Record: An amendment to Official Comment 6 to Section 9-509 is intended to clarify that authorization to file a record under Section 9-509(d) (that is, an amendment other than an amendment that adds collateral covered by a financing statement or an amendment that adds a debtor to a financing statement) need not appear in an authenticated record. This stands in contrast with the requirement, that any authorization required under Section 9-509(a) (that is, in connection with an initial financing statement, an amendment that adds collateral covered by a financing statement, or an amendment that adds a debtor to a financing statement) must appear in an authenticated record.

Section 9-512 – Amendment of Financing Statement (new debtor or new name): Many have puzzled over Section 9-512 (Amendment of Financing Statement), and its requirements where a debtor undergoes a “conversion” under applicable state law. Many states permit “conversion” of one organization into another, but they differ (and some are simply unclear) as to whether the organization resulting from the conversion is the same legal person as the organization prior to conversion, or is a new organization. That is, it is sometimes unclear whether the debtor is the same organization, albeit with a different name (and perhaps a different type of organization, jurisdiction of organization, and organizational identification number), or is a different organization entirely. Current Article 9 defers to the law governing conversion for a determination as to whether the resulting organization is the same legal person as the original debtor, and the 2010 Amendments would make no change in that approach. New Official Comment 5 is intended to clarify and emphasize this deference. It explicitly provides that when such organizations are one and the same, an amendment reflecting the name (and any other) change should be filed, whereas when such organizations are separate and distinct, an amendment adding the resulting entity as a new debtor should be filed. Helpfully, the Official Comment offers that in the face of uncertainty, one would do well to follow both courses of action.

Section 9-515 - Evergreen Filings Against Transmitting Utilities: Recognizing a systems limitation present in many filing offices, Section 515(f) would be revised to require that in order to take advantage of the special rule that a financing statement naming a transmitting utility as debtor is effective until terminated, the initial financing statement (as contrasted with an amendment thereto) must indicate such status. The similar rule, found in Section 515(b) and providing for 30 year effectiveness of financing statements relating to public-finance or manufactured-home transactions, has always required the requisite designation in the initial financing statement. Many filing offices simply can't revisit their initial coding of a financing statement to change its lapse date.

Section 9-521 – Uniform Form of Written Financing Statement and Amendment: In an effort to assist searchers in eliminating from concern filings that appear to relate to the debtors with which they are concerned but which, in fact, relate to other, identically or similarly named debtors, Current Article 9 provides that a financing statement can be rejected if it fails to state the debtor's type of organization, jurisdiction of organization, and organizational identification number (or an indication that it has none).¹¹ Of course, such information has little relevance except as applied to registered organizations, as to which filings are generally to be made in their jurisdiction of formation. But jurisdictions generally preclude the duplicative use of registered organization names and confusingly or deceptively similar names. The consequence is that the burden of providing such information was adjudged greater than any resulting benefit. The 2010 Amendments would eliminate any requirement for these three items of data. To implement these and other changes (e.g., those relating to debtors' names and other information, discussed above), the 2010 Amendments include new written financing statement forms, which will replace the forms appearing in Current Article 9 Section 9-521.

Section 9-518 – Claim Concerning Inaccurate or Wrongfully Filed Record: In a pernicious example of regrettable word choice, Current Article 9 gave rise to the so-called "correction statement." Conceptually, it was to be something akin to the statement an aggrieved debtor could send to the omnipotent consumer credit rating agencies to place "on record" a statement of disagreement with respect to an entry believed to be erroneous under the Fair Credit Reporting Act. The Article 9 correction statement is a mechanism by which a debtor can add to the public record an objection to, a statement that he or she never authorized, or other remarks concerning a given financing statement. As a matter of law, it can be filed only by a debtor, and has no legal effect whatsoever.¹² Despite the clarity with which these limitations are stated, not a few secured parties have purported to file correction statements, sometimes seeking to "undo" terminations filed in error.¹³ In any event, the 2010 Amendments would rename these filings "information statements," and would permit both secured parties and debtors to file them. They would continue to have no legal effect, but nonetheless may prove helpful (for example, consider the secured party whose financing statement has not been terminated, but whose financing statement appears to have been terminated owing to the presence in the record of an erroneous termination statement filed by a rogue actor without authority).

Proposed Changes to Part 6: Default. The rules applicable following the occurrence of a default are being revised in three respects: nonjudicial enforcement of mortgages, public notice of electronic disposition of collateral, and prohibition of secured party's buying collateral in its private disposition.

¹¹ 9-516(b)(5)(C).

¹² See 9-518.

Section 9-607 – Collection and Enforcement by Secured Party: As it appears in Current Article 9, Section 9-607(b)(2)(A) relates to nonjudicial enforcement of mortgages. It permits the secured party to record a copy of the relevant security agreement and a sworn affidavit with the mortgage records. This sworn statement must state that a default has occurred, but is less than explicit in indicating that such default must have occurred with respect to the obligation secured by the mortgage, as contrasted with some other obligation. For example, suppose Homeowner obtains a mortgage loan from Bailey Savings and Loan, which in turn sells the mortgage loan to Bear Stearns, which bundles it with others and sells interests in the pool through a securitization. If the securitization vehicle defaults, for example by failing to make a scheduled payment under the securities it issued, the holder of such securities would not be able to foreclose Homeowner's mortgage. This result, intended by Current Article 9, is more clearly mandated by the 2010 Amendments.

Section 9-613 – Contents and Form of Notification before Disposition of Collateral:
General: There has been much consternation in recent years regarding notification of a public disposition of collateral that will be conducted electronically. New text in Official Comment 2 to Section 9-613 (Contents and Form of Notification Before Disposition of Collateral: General) would confirm the applicability of such section to such dispositions, and clarify what information is required for compliance. Among other things, the 2010 Amendments clarify that a Uniform Resource Locator (URL) or other Internet address currently suffices as an electronic "location."

Section 9-624 – Waiver: Official Comment 2 to Section 9-624 (Waiver) notes that such section is a limited exception to the general rule of Section 9-602 prohibiting waiver by debtors and obligors. It explicitly notes that the rule prohibiting a secured party from buying at its own private disposition, the equivalent of a "strict foreclosure," cannot be waived. The 2010 Amendments would add language to similar effect to both Official Comment 3 to Section 9-602 and Official Comment 7 to Section 9-610. A new Official Comment 10 would be added to Section 9-611 (Notification Before Disposition of Collateral), reminding readers that enforcement of an Article 9 security interest may implicate other law.

Proposed Change to Part 7: Transition. The 2010 Amendments include the addition of text to Official Comment 2 to Section 9-706 (When Initial Financing Statement Suffices to Continue Effectiveness of Financing Statement), emphasizing that the "minor error" rule in Section 9-506(a) applies to any initial financing statement filed as an "in lieu" continuation statement pursuant to Section 9-706.

Proposed (New) Part 8: Transition. When Current Article 9 was released for consideration and enactment, there was great interest in having a uniform effective date in all enacting jurisdictions. In furtherance of that goal, its text provided for a uniform effective date of July 1, 2001, roughly three years after its release. Similarly, the 2010 Amendments contemplate a July 1, 2013 effective date.¹⁴ Generally, there's a five-year transition period before "old" filings made in conformity with Current Article 9 must be amended or otherwise revised to conform to the 2010 Amendments. The most significant transition issue, and the one likely to require the greatest number of amendments, involves sufficiency of debtors' names under Section 9-503, particularly those relating to individual debtors. Less common, but no less important, is the fact that certain debtors not currently but soon-to-be considered "registered organizations" may experience a change in location (i.e., from their place of business or chief executive office to their jurisdiction of formation).

Accompanying Revision to UCC Article 8 (Investment Securities): The 2010 Amendments would add a new paragraph to Official Comment 13 to UCC Article 8 (Investment Securities) Section 8-102 (Definitions). The paragraph addresses the registrability requirement in the definition of "registered form" and its parallel in the definition of "security," clarifying that such requirement is satisfied only if books are maintained for the purpose of register of transfer, including termination of rights under Section 8-207(a) (or, in the case of a certificated security, the security so states). Explicitly rejecting the holding of Highland Capital Management LP v. Schneider, 8 N.Y.3d 406 (2007), the comment notes it is not sufficient that the issuer record ownership or transfers for other purposes, nor is it sufficient that the issuer, though not in fact maintaining books for such purpose, theoretically could do so (for such is always the case).

Invitation to Repeal UCC Article 11: Finally, noting that UCC Article 11 affects transactions that were entered into before the effective date of the 1972 amendments to Article 9, the 2010 Amendments invite states to consider whether they may wish to repeal Article 11.
